Han culture places of origin

Xuzhou was home to the first emperor of the Han dynasty and has a long history, although it has not yet been discovered by tourists. It has an interesting blend of traditional China along with a fast developing, modern city. Located between Shanghai and Beijing, it is a great gateway for exploring China.

Xuzhou is a mix between new and old, between modern and traditional. You will find major shopping malls side by side with street vendors, modern apartment buildings and traditional Chinese households. Outside your apartment building you will find small shops, a variety of restaurants, retired Chinese watching their grandchildren or playing ma jiang, and in the evening there is dancing in the squares.

From the vibrant street markets downtown to the gorgeous man made lake in the south west of the city, life as a foreigner in Xuzhou is always an interesting adventure, but at the same time always comfortable. While having access to international restaurants and supermarkets, you have the benefits of local prices which makes daily life in Xuzhou very attractive.
